In 1968, St Vincent’s Hospital transferred its affiliation from the University of Sydney to the University of New South Wales.

The hospital appointed two academic chair positions; Professor John Hickie (Medicine) and Professor Douglas Tracy (Surgery) and signed an affiliation agreement in 1968 with the Professors commencing duties in early 1969. They were to play a significant role in the development of the Clinical School, fostering the strong partnership between the University and the hospital which we see today.

The first student enrolments with UNSW commenced on 10th February 1969.
